When Mind Sparks Mind: First-Year Seminars

"There were those shining moments in classes, when mind sparked mind, as if a spark from a teacher's mind fell on the dry grass of mine and caught fire. How well I remember the thrill of that, and the intuitive knowledge that at that moment I had broken through to reality." —Catherine Marshall LeSourd '36

These are some of my favorite words from an Agnes Scott alumna—one of our most famous, in fact—prolific writer and editor Catherine Marshall. I use this vivid image when I talk to prospective students and their parents, confident that a new generation of young women will have exactly the same learning experience as early as their first semester at Agnes Scott College.

Agnes Scott exists to cultivate the life of the mind, and the transition from high school to college is where the process should begin. Philosophy Professor Richard Parry likens the intellectual awakening to the moment in The Wizard of Oz when the black-and-white landscape turns to Technicolor. Subtleties, shades, nuances and depth are enhanced, and a whole new world beckons. But how does this happen? The transformation takes place when a young woman becomes suddenly, deeply engaged in the world of complex ideas, experiencing, as did Catherine Marshall, those shining moments in class, when mind sparks mind.

Agnes Scott began developing First-Year Seminars several years ago to jump-start that exhilarating learning experience. Limited to 16 students apiece and required of every first-year student, the seminars offer women new to Agnes Scott an intimate alternative learning environment. Disciplinary survey courses, though necessary introductions to more complex upper-level work, do not guarantee early intellectual confidence and creativity. Nor do they provide an adequate introduction to the critical and interdisciplinary thinking so vital to liberal learning. In contrast, First-Year Seminars explore one topic deeply, often by drawing upon many different genres—essay, film, novel, popular fiction, original text. They also range widely across disciplines and cultures. Common to them all, however, is the commitment to the teaching of writing for which Agnes Scott has long been known. Whether taking courses in English or economics, astrophysics or art, FYS students encounter a writing-intensive curriculum developed in partnership with our Center for Writing and Speaking.

First-Year Seminars invite Agnes Scott faculty to stretch intellectually, as well. FYS instructors may take a whimsical approach to a serious subject or work out ideas for an article or a book in collaboration with a first-year class, and their ongoing dialogue with one another enriches our entire campus community. As you read the ensuing class-specific observations, followed by insights from Professor Gus Cochran, program director 2001–2003, you will immediately sense the intellectual excitement these seminars engender in both faculty and students.

Of course, the First-Year Seminars would not be possible without the loyal donors recognized on pages 8 to 29 of this report.

The FYS program's success is emblematic of a banner year for our College. For further evidence, note the strategic indicators that follow, and rejoice with us in U.S. News & World Report's having ranked Agnes Scott among the country's top 50 liberal arts colleges!

Each year of my presidency at Agnes Scott, I have sought direct involvement with students. Last year I taught an upper-level history course on contemporary China. This year I am serving as a first-year adviser, working with eight students who hail from Georgia to Ghana. It is early in the semester, yet I am seeing their worlds burst into Technicolor, one by one, as their intellects catch fire in First-Year Seminars, sparked by the minds of their professors and classmates and by contact with the liberal arts. This is what Catherine Marshall remembered. This is an Agnes Scott education.

The Detective Novel in the Modern World

STEVEN R. GUTHRIE, PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH

Student: "I loved this class! Professor Guthrie made detective fiction come alive. In my first year, English was not my major at all, and now I'm trying to decide whether to major in English or political science. I became a nerd because of this class—I devoted so much time to trying to improve. I would write a paper I thought was perfect, and Professor Guthrie would still find ways to make it better. His comments were fair, and I could see why he said what he did. At the end of the semester, I took my final paper home in my hand luggage because of all my courses, getting an A on that final paper made me the proudest."

Adventurers, Explorers and Pilgrims: The Lure of Afghanistan and Central Asia

PENELOPE CAMPBELL, CHARLES A. DANA PROFESSOR OF HISTORY

Campbell: "Many of my first-year seminar students were excellent to begin with, but as the semester progressed they all seemed to become more confident in voicing their opinions and in (courteously) challenging the opinions of others. They became participants in the process of learning rather than objects of the instruction."

Mexican Atlanta: Contemporary Migration Issues

MARTHA REES, ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF ANTHROPOLOGY

Student essay: "When I first finished reading Gloria Anzaldúa's Borderlands/La Frontera, I was speechless. I was at my sister's kitchen table doing homework, and . . . I just sat there staring at the pages. It amazed me that this woman who was born and raised in a different culture, in a different country, thousands of miles away could agree with me—that we could share an opinion my own friends and family resented me for having."

Images of the Teacher in Film and Literature

PATRICIA G. PINKA, PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH

Pinka: "I want you to have fun with the final assignment even though it's the hardest thing you'll do this year. You will write a conversation between two of the fictional teachers we have encountered. Their subject, of course, will be teaching. You'll want to choose two who will make the experience funny and delightful; don't choose two whose philosophies of teaching agree. You want there to be conflict."

Student: "I'll have Miss Jean Brodie and Mr. Gradgrind meet on a blind date!"

Combating World Poverty: What Works?

EDMUND J. SHEEHY, HAL AND JULIA T. SMITH PROFESSOR OF FREE ENTERPRISE

Student: "Our course material spanned some very interesting topics, such as globalization, poverty, corruption and international law. . . . I am also thankful there were such diverse people in class, which gave our discussions a 'U.N.' quality."

Alien Nation

AUGUSTUS COCHRAN III, ADELINE A. LORIDANS PROFESSOR OF POLITICAL SCIENCE

Student: "This class definitely had a major impact on my life. One of the books we read was Eric Schlosser's Fast Food Nation: The Dark Side of the All-American Meal. It's about what goes on behind the scenes at fast-food companies and the marketing principles they use to push their products. It went into detail on the meat-packing industry, and I've been a vegetarian ever since."

The Ways of China: Building a Spiritual and Material Civilization

DENNIS MCCANN, WALLACE M. ALSTON PROFESSOR OF BIBLE AND RELIGION

McCann: "I'm not sure our students should draw boundaries between the academic community and the larger learning community in which we live. I took my Ways of China class to a Chinese restaurant because food is so integral to Chinese culture, touching issues of worldview, health, gender and aesthetics. For many of the students, this was the very first time they had eaten with chopsticks!"

Other Worlds

CHRISTOPHER G. DE PREE, ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF ASTRONOMY

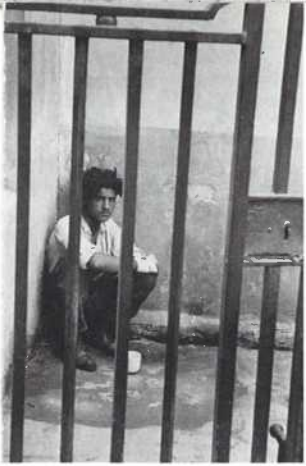

De Pree: "Throughout the semester we read chapters from Jeffrey Lee's The Scientific Endeavour, which gives a sense of how scientists view the world. I think it helped students see that writing and speaking, in addition to research and analysis, are integral to science. The First-Year Seminar gives me a chance to show first-year students what it's like to be a scientist. All FYS instructors get to introduce their disciplines on a deeper level—that's what's powerful about it."

Narratives of Expatriation: American Writers in Paris

WILLIE TOLLIVER JR., ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH AND DIRECTOR OF AFRICANA STUDIES

Tolliver: "My course raised issues of race, class and gender that were very enlightening for students. For instance, if we watched a film like Funny Face, I'd bring up the class issues associated with Audrey Hepburn and say, 'Look, there's something you might be able to do with this critically, to understand the cultural and social assumptions beneath the messages that movies convey.' We also addressed the backlash against France that occurred last spring, which prompted us to talk about the French character and the whole history of American-French relations."

Narratives of Escape and Captivity

RACHEL TROUSDALE, ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH

Trousdale: "As we looked at the similarities, or lack thereof, among very different kinds of captivity ranging from slavery to women's social roles, students addressed issues they might have encountered in classes in English, history or philosophy. They did fairly formal literary analysis; they made historical presentations, then considered how the history and literature illuminated each other; and they discussed serious ethical questions, as, for instance, those implicit in the two endings of A Doll's House: Why does Nora leave her children? How valid are her reasons? And why did Ibsen give in to the pressure to change the ending and have her stay?"

Deconstructing Britney: Women in Popular Culture

ROGER ROTHMAN, ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF ART

Student: "I had no idea what to expect when I signed up for this course, but the more involved I got in it, the more interesting it became for me. I do, however, feel this class should come with some sort of warning label illustrating that students will find things . . . a little disconcerting from the first day on. Not that they won't enjoy the material, just that pop culture will be seen in a new light. I found myself slowly seeing what being an educated consumer actually meant."

Pompeii: Life in a Roman City

GAIL CABISIUS, ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF CLASSICAL LANGUAGES AND LITERATURES

Excerpt from student's 15-page novella: "The door to the [ritual] room [of her grandmother, Cornelia] was between the first and last scenes in the great frieze painted on the walls, and Livia turned slowly to take it all in. 'It's magnificent,' she breathed softly. 'Yes, it is,' Cornelia agreed. 'These frescoes were painted just two years before the Senate cracked down upon our sect. My grandmother paid the finest wallpainter in Rome to come down here and complete the task. But we keep this room closely guarded because our rites must be kept secret, lest we incur the wrath of Rome. Come, my daughter.'"

Virtue and Happiness

RICHARD PARRY, FULLER E. CALLAWAY PROFESSOR OF PHILOSOPHY

Student: "For the final paper, we all wrote about Aristotle's Nicomachean Ethics, summarizing the points Aristotle used and then agreeing or disagreeing with them. Writing this kind of paper is not like solving a math problem that has one answer, but I enjoyed arguing against the great Aristotle and proving, in my own way, that virtuous acts can be innate and are not simply habitual."

Southern American Grassroots Music and Modern Media

TRACEY E. W. LAIRD, ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF MUSIC

Laird: "The first-year students came to the course with a wide variety of musical knowledge and experience. Music was an important part of their lives but something they experienced without a lot of deliberation. Part of my satisfaction in teaching the course was working together to bring words to bear on a subject that had seemed to them beyond words."

Sampling of Additional First-Year Seminars

2001–2002

- Rascals, Clowns, Fools and Tricksters
- On Location, Ireland: Literature, Landscape and Culture Through Film
- Myths and Realities of Globalization
- The Bible and Human Rights in Atlanta

2003–2004

- Shakespeare and Film
- The Value of Life in Latin America
- Women and Comedy
- Gladiators
- Music of Latin America and the Caribbean
- From Zero to Infinity

GUS COCHRAN

What does it really take to teach a First-Year Seminar at Agnes Scott?

That's a two-part question: What does it take to teach a seminar of all first-year students? and What does it take to be in a seminar program created and re-created every year by a group of 15 or so faculty members?

As a political scientist, I'd never taught courses limited exclusively to first-years; introductory courses in political science typically draw students from all levels. What I've learned, partly from my own experience but even more from observing my colleagues teach highly effective seminars, is that FYS instructors need to remember what those first few days and weeks in college are like—no easy task at my age, I might add. In particular, FYS instructors must learn how to build on the tremendous freshness entering students bring to those first college endeavors. Their initial energy and enthusiasm have to be appreciated, but students' intellects also need to be developed, refined, polished—in a word, educated—not to fit some predetermined mold but so that more mature, reflective, complex and disciplined thinkers can emerge, ready to plunge into upper-level work and the exciting world of college.

As a joint endeavor, the First-Year Seminar program calls upon instructors to teach in a different way. FYS instruction is more collegial—seminars typically are led by a single faculty member, but the design of the 15 courses we offer each year is shaped collaboratively through a series of workshops for current and past FYS instructors led by Christine Cozzens, associate professor of English and director of the Center for Writing and Speaking. This ongoing design process requires faculty members to be open and vulnerable. Each year, we depend on one another to share "triumphs and tribulations" so we can build on our collective experience. Invariably, most instructive is not simply what worked well—although we always learn some wonderfully creative and innovative approaches to teaching. Even more beneficial is hearing about what flopped and, for example, trying to diagnose why a particular assignment just didn't work or a certain discussion didn't elicit enthusiastic participation. I think we all appreciate hearing about one another's failures so that we can avoid repeating mistakes—and we're fortified to keep on trying! It's a bit daunting to admit your fallibility to your respected colleagues, but accepting this risk has proved unexpectedly rewarding. In fact, I would rate working as part of a group to create and improve a set of First-Year Seminars with the potential to set the intellectual tone of the College as the most exciting experience in my (rather lengthy) teaching career.

My wish for Rosemary Cunningham, as she takes over as FYS director, and for future participants, both students and instructors, is that they will be fortunate enough to reap the same rich intellectual rewards as did the early participants in this evolving program.

Gus Cochran, Adeline A. Loridans Professor of Political Science, early advocate of First-Year Seminars and program director 2001–2003
